MEMORANDUM FOR THE RECORD

SUBJECT: Contact with Les Gelb, New York Times,
11 November 1976

1. About 5:00 P.M. on 11 November I received a phone call at my office extension from Les Gelb of the New York Times. I had never spoken with Gelb before. My sole encounter with him was January 1976 at a meeting on China in New York at the Council on Foreign Relations. Gelb, however, referred to me by my first name with a certain accepted familiarity.

2. Gelb said he had a message from a Times correspondent overseas to the effect that the Russians were waving the latest Chinese message to Moscow saying it meant reconciliation. Gelb said he was skeptical and was thinking of writing his own piece on the subject. He asked for my views. I gave him a quick [redacted] analysis of Chinese public statements on the issue of improving state-to-state relations. I expressed the view that although an improvement in relations was a distinct possibility, the evidence was not available to date. I also told him the Russians were mischievous on this score.

3. Gelb said he detected a difference between policy makers of State who felt that there was an amelioration in the making and analysts who did not see the evidence.

4. I asked Gelb not to quote me in any context. He said emphatically he would not refer to me by name nor would he mention anything about intelligence sources. He then said somewhat testily "after all you were only commenting on public information and there shouldn't be anything secret about that."

To: ATF and a copy to OGC

Subject: Tom Braden phone call today 11-9

Tom called saying OGC had been in touch with him on clearing his American Heritage Piece,

He griped a little about this saying the piece had no security problems but then saying he planned to call OGC on it.

INTL

He then went on to outline the problem the CIA has with journalists. Saying how [redacted] used to call Reston or someone [redacted] like that to get the papers NOT to print very special stuff..He feels we are too sensitive now etc.

STATINTL

STATINTL

It was a friendly talk. I made the point to him that we had very different problems today than we used to in those good old days. He talked about the Marchetti book. I mentioned to him the Smith book and the problem we were having with people who were unwilling to give us thorough advanced looks at texts in accord with their security agreements.

The conversation lacked controversy but I was a little unclear as to why he called.

Dear Mr. Bush:

Enclosed is a copy of the AIM Report for October. The entire issue is devoted to Victor Lasky's devastating critique of the Woodward and Bernstein book, The Final Days. I think you will find it of interest.

Accuracy in Media (AIM) has been engaging in combat with inaccurate and biased journalists for the past seven years. We have taken on Woodward and Bernstein previously for their failure to report on the prior knowledge of the Watergate break-in by high officials of the Democratic National Committee and columnist Jack Anderson. We finally got that story into the Washington Post by buying a full page ad to tell it in all its intriguing detail.

In recent months the AIM Report has exposed the New York Times for publication of an article slanted to favor the communist regime in Vietnam under a false name, with no indication that the identity of the author was being concealed. We revealed the author to be an official of the U. N. in Vietnam.

We showed how our tax-supported public television system aired a program on migrant farm workers in Florida that was a propaganda pitch for Cesar Chavez and his United Farm Workers Union. It was actually produced by people active in the Chavez movement!

We have shown how CBS has distorted the facts in an effort to persuade the public that industry is largely to blame for cancer. We have taken apart two CBS "documentaries" on the subject of chemicals and cancer.

We showed how the Eastern media downplayed revelations by the Los Angeles Times about campaign expenditures by the Carter campaign that violated the new federal election campaign laws.

You have probably heard about the great work AIM is doing: Why not join us? Contributions to AIM are tax-deductible.
